MATTHEW SWAMPS N. CAROLINA BEFORE TURNING OUT TO SEA

1 Emergency crews in boats rescued hundreds of people from floodwaters and plucked others from rooftops by helicopter in North Carolina after former Hurricane Matthew flooded much of the Southeast before weakening on Sunday and turning out to sea. Matthew, the most powerful Atlantic storm since 2007, was downgraded to a post-tropical cyclone on Sunday after its rampage through the Caribbean killed nearly 900 people in Haiti and at least 16 people in the United States. Haiti also has suffered from outbreaks of cholera and about 61,500 displaced people were in shelters, officials said. In the United States, more than 2 million homes and business had lost power. Officials said many coastal and inland communities were still under water, either from coastal storm surge or overrun rivers and creeks. REUTERS

SUSPECT ARRESTED IN FATAL SHOOTING OF TWO CALIF. POLICE OFFICERS

2 Police arrested a suspect early on Sunday in the fatal shooting of two officers and the wounding of a third in Palm Springs, California, after an hours-long standoff that began with a report of a family dispute. John Felix, 26, was taken into custody just after midnight at the home in Palm Springs where the officers were shot on Saturday afternoon. Four officers came under fire soon after arriving at the residence in response to a call from a woman who said her son was causing a disturbance, police said. Two police officers, Jose Vega, a 35-year veteran, and Lesley Zerebny, 27, were killed, and another officer, who authorities declined to identify, suffered nonlife-threatening injuries. Felix was treated at a hospital after his arrest. He will be booked on two counts of murder, according to a police press release. REUTERS

MUSK SAYS HE WON'T HAVE TO RAISE FUNDS IN FOURTH QUARTER

3 Tesla Motors CEO Elon Musk said the company would not need to raise equity or corporate debt in the fourth quarter for its planned acquisition of SolarCity Corp., contradicting a filing the company made with regulators last week. Asked on Twitter whether the company would raise funds in first quarter of 2017, Musk tweeted, "Probably not then either." A Tesla spokeswoman did not immediately reply to a request for comment on Sunday. In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission on Friday, Tesla said it "is currently planning to raise additional funds by the end of this year, including through potential equity or debt offerings, subject to market conditions and recognizing that Tesla cannot be certain that additional funds would be available to it on favorable terms or at all." NORTHEAST SPARED MATTHEW'S WRATH

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS
@weathersavior

Hurricane Matthew did significant-to-major damage from Florida to Virginia, but it did not deliver the extreme blow that many feared.

Haiti was in the crosshairs and received a devastating strike with over 400 fatalities.

Most of the damage along the Florida coastline from Palm Beach and points north, especially the northeastern coast of Florida, was from storm surge — flooding shore towns, significantly damaging structures, toppling trees and causing widespread power outages.

Luckily, the most powerful of the hurricane winds, which exceeded 100 mph, remained about 40-70 miles off shore, sparing Florida a direct hit.

North Carolina had severe flooding, the worst since Hurricane Floyd in 1999. Georgia and South Carolina saw major storm surges of more than 9 feet, causing major damage along well-populated coastal towns, especially Charleston and Myrtle Beach.

The Northeast was spared for the most part, except for a rotten weekend with periods of rain, strong winds along the southern New Jersey coast and some tidal flooding.

The chilly, wet weekend stretched all the way up the East Coast through southern New England. However, it will be smooth sailing for this Columbus Day as sunshine will brighten the October skies from Philly to New York City to Boston.

A huge dome of high pressure will lock in the sunshine through Wednesday, with a small wrinkle on Thursday as a weak cool front swings through during the day, bringing the chance of a scattered shower or two. Another dome of high pressure emerges Friday, delivering cooler temperatures. Plenty of sunshine is expected for the weekend.

Wednesday: Mostly sunny, High 63

Thursday: Afternoon scattered showers, High 65

Friday: Sunny, High 58

Saturday: Partly sunny, cooler, High 55

German police make new raid in hunt for refugee planning attack

Police found several hundred grams of explosives in the apartment they raided.

German police commandos hunting a fugitive Syrian bomb plot suspect raided a flat on Sunday. GETTY IMAGES

German police commandos stormed an apartment in the eastern city of Chemnitz on Sunday and detained a man in connection with a hunt for a Syrian refugee suspected of planning a bomb attack.

"Nobody was injured and no shots were fired. We've taken the man into custody and we are questioning him now," said Tom Berhardt, spokesman for the Saxony state criminal investigation office.

Police found explosives in another apartment they raided in the city on Saturday but have been unable to track down the suspect, 22-year-old Jaber al-Bakr. Police saw him at the door of the apartment block before he slipped through their grasp.

Police evacuated the residential building and fired a warning shot before storming the first apartment only to find al-Bakr was not there, said Kathlen Zink, another official at the Saxony state criminal investigation office.

The German authorities have informed foreign security services about al-Bakr, Zink added. The Federal Prosecutor's Office said it was taking over the case.

"The overall picture of the investigation, in particular the amount of the explosive found, suggests that the person was planning to carry out an Islamist-motivated attack," a spokesman for the Federal Prosecutor's Office told broadcaster SWR.

The suspicion that a refugee was planning a bomb attack will prove unwelcome news for Chancellor Angela Merkel, whose conservatives have lost support to the far-right Alternative for Germany Party over her open-door migrants policy.

Merkel, who last month said she wished she could "turn back the time by many, many years" to better prepare for last year's influx of almost 1 million migrants, has yet to say whether she will seek a fourth term as chancellor in elections next year.

> "We must continue to assume that this person poses a danger."
> Bernhardt

In July, Islamic State claimed responsibility for attacks on a train near Wuerzburg and at a music festival in Ansbach which wounded 20 people.

Despite deploying hundreds of officers, police have been unable to find al-Bakr.

"We must continue to assume that this person poses a danger," said Bernhardt.

Police earlier appealed to the public for any information on al-Bakr. They described him as wearing a black hooded top with a bright pattern on the front, and warned people to be careful of him.

Al-Bakr had been in Germany since last year and was officially recognized as a refugee, Bernhardt said. He was not previously known to police, who raided the first flat after a tip-off from the domestic intelligence service.

Man's '666' forehead tattoo helped cops identify shoplifting suspect

A Bourne man's eye-catching face tattoo helped police bust him and his girlfriend for allegedly stealing $570 worth of sunglasses from an area mall.

Eliezer Santiago, 39, had the Biblical mark of the beast—the number "666"—written across his forehead, police said.

He and Grace H. Stewart, 32, were arrested Thursday after a theft at an Oakley store in the Natick Mall, police told the Natick Bulletin.

Police said they pulled over the suspects' vehicle as they fled the mall and found three sunglasses that employees reported missing after the pair left.

Both were charged with larceny of property worth more than $250 and conspiracy to commit a crime.

A judge ordered Santiago held on $2,000 bail and Stewart on $500, along with an order to stay away from the mall.

There was no information available as to whether they had obtained lawyers who could comment on the charges on their behalf.

9-year-old girl shot at Roxbury park

Boston police are imploring the public to pass on any information about the shooting of a 9-year-old girl in a playground early Sunday morning.

The child is said to have been with a group of people in the Roxbury playground on Annunciation Road at about 1 a.m. when she was hit by gunfire.

"We need your help on this one," Boston Police Chief William Gross said. "There's too many guns on the street. Time for everyone to pull together and help us solve this one."

Police said that the girl was alert and speaking when she was being transported to the hospital for surgery, and she is expected to survive the gunshot wounds.

From where and by whom the gun shots came remained unknown as of Sunday afternoon.

Anyone who may have a tip is urged to call Boston Police.

SEX, SIGHS AND AUDIOTAPE

The vote is in November but many pundits are wondering if the decisive moments of this election are on us right now. Here are my three things to watch in what could be a pivotal week in politics.

1. BOOM GOES THE DYNAMITE
That smoky aroma is not from a fresh rack of celebratory ribs. That is the smell of a campaign on fire ... and not in a good way. The flames are billowing around Team Trump after the release of that audiotape of their guy chatting in explicit and vulgar terms about trying to seduce a married woman, and about women in general. It was 2005. Trump was newly married. And he issued a statement saying, "I apologize if anyone was offended." But just listen. The campaign is deploying extinguishers like there is no tomorrow because if they can't lower the heat, there may actually be no tomorrow. Climb the fire towers and watch the smoke. This news may hit the polls like gasoline on a Weber, and if so, Trump could be toast. If not, then maybe he really is fireproof.

Opinion

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously." @tomforemancnn

2. BATTLE STATIONS
In case you haven't noticed, the country is shrinking fast. Forget the bright red and blue states. Trump and Clinton are spending more and more time in the places most likely to decide the race — the battlegrounds. This week, Ohio and Florida will get a ton of play. Watch for candidate photo ops with flood victims in the Sunshine State and with working class folks in the Rust Belt. Bonus points if you see a picture of both in a single snap!

3. YOUR BALLOT, COMRADE?
President Obama, who once mocked Mitt Romney for saying the Russians were a major threat, is now saying they really are. The White House is officially accusing Russia of trying to sway the U.S. election by hacking into the computers of political groups. The real question now, is: Have the hacking efforts been brought under control? Watch for reassurances this week to head off challenges to the election results.

Fed's Fischer says job gains solid, expects growth to pick up

Job gains in the United States remain solid and growth should pick up in the second half of the year, Fed Vice Chair Stanley Fischer said on Sunday in remarks that indicate the central bank remains on track for a December rate increase.

The United States is "close to full employment," Fischer said in remarks prepared for delivery to the Group of 30, a panel of current and former central bankers, regulators and academic economists, during the annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank.

"With solid gains in employment and household income and upbeat consumer sentiment," Fischer said, consumption spending "should continue to support growth over the second half of the year." The session was closed to the press, but Fischer's prepared remarks were released by the Fed ahead of his scheduled address.

The steady progress on jobs, continued growth and faith that inflation will rise towards the Fed's 2 percent target has set the stage for policymakers to increase rates in December as part of a gradual tightening of monetary policy.

Fischer said the decision not to increase rates in September was a "close call" done largely to allow further progress on jobs. At this point, he said, "there appears little risk of falling behind the curve in the near future," on inflation, allowing the Fed to raise rates slowly. REUTERS

Man attempts to sexually assault woman in Mission Hill, police say
A woman told Boston Police that she was attacked in broad daylight by a man who tried to sexually assault her near Fitzgerald Park in Mission Hill.

The woman told investigators that a man came up from behind her just before 1:45 p.m. Saturday on St. Alphonsus Street and threw her to the ground.

The man attempted to sexually assault her before fleeing, police said.

The suspect was described as a man in his late 20s, about 5 feet 8 inches tall, with a slim build, goatee, black hair in a ponytail and tattoos on both arms. He was wearing black and white sneakers, black shorts and a black T-shirt with white lettering at the time.

He was later seen riding a Rincon model Giant brand mountain bike toward Huntington Avenue.

Six months, 16 countries, 49 shows and over $200 million in revenue later, Beyonce's Formation World Tour is done. The 35-year-old megastar pulled off a star-studded finale at New Jersey's MetLife Stadium on Friday night that included a debut of "Lemonade" single "6 Inch," where the singer was suspended in air and upside down!

Tennis great Serena Williams reprised her role as video vixen on stage, complete with sexy leotard, for "Sorry." After spitting his verse on "Freedom," rapper Kendrick Lamar joined Bey in her iconic splash pool. And given that he is the inspiration for most of the content in "Lemonade," it was only right that Beyonce's hubby, rapper Jay Z, joined her for "Drunk in Love." The couple flirted and kissed to a cheering crowd. Jay Z better not mess this up.

Dr. Dre threatens to sue Sony

Dr. Dre clearly cares about his reputation. The music producer's legal team released a cease and desist letter to Sony pictures for Lifetime's "Surviving Compton: Dre, Suge & Michel'le," a biopic about R&B singer Michel'le and her relationship with the hip-hop mogul at the height of his music career reports TMZ.

Apparently trailers for the film depict Dre as violently abusive and his is not happy about it. In the letter Dre denies abusing Michel'le, noting that she never received medical attention or alerted police about any abuse. He is threatening to sue the company if he is portrayed as an abuser in the made-for-TV film, which airs Oct. 15.

We'd like to hear Michel'le's take.

How to talk about dating on a date

LAURIE DAVIS EDWARDS

Single and Swiping

Laurie Davis Edwards is the founder of eFlirt, an online dating concierge service, and the best-selling author of "Love @ First Click: The Ultimate Guide to Online Dating."

There's nothing more awkward than a date asking, "How is online dating going for you?" Cringe. Aren't we here to create new potential – not linger on the past? Yet still, people ask.

It happens because whatever site or app you met on is one thing you definitely have in common. It's a comfort zone. And sometimes dating can feel really outside of your comfort zone.

If your date retreats to the land of accidental awkwardness, here's how to handle the question.

Tease your date. Teasing is actually a form of flirting, so use it as an opportunity to build rapport with each other. Rather than getting offended or feeling unsure of yourself, take a playful tone in your response.

You might try something like, "Why? Is this date going so well that you want to know who else I'm dating already?" Or, "Well, I met you, didn't I?" You could even address the awkwardness by responding with something like, "Well, that's a weird question for a first date. Surely we have more in common than Match/Tinder/OkCupid!"

When you're teasing, keep in mind that tone and body language matter most to make it clear that you're poking fun with your response.

Transition off the topic quickly. After teasing, re-engage by showing genuine interest in your match. Ask something you really want to know, so you shift the focus back to the connection you're creating. Ultimately, that is where online dating got the two of you!

Make sure you avoid the detour. The answer to this question has the power to derail a date. For example, reminding your date that you have other suitors can take the two of you out of the intimate space you're attempting to build. Or if you use it as an opportunity to gripe about the site or app where you met, it could force you further apart rather than closer together.

Rob Riggle plays the evil boyfriend of our tween hero's mom (Lauren Graham) in "Middle School: The Worst Years of My Life." CBS FILMS

Junior high is the pits

Rob Riggle talks about "Middle School: The Worst Years of My Life" and his own awful past.

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

Predictably enough, Rob Riggle isn't a terribly nice guy in "Middle School: The Worst Years of My Life." In the comedy, based on James Patterson's bestseller, the comic, actor and "Daily Show" alum plays one of the plagues upon our tween hero (Griffin Gluck): the new boyfriend of his mother (Lauren Graham), who doesn't like her kids too much. It's standard issue for Riggle, 46: "I play a nice character every now and then. But the majority are pretty jerky," he says.

We talked to Riggle about his own unhappy memories of junior high, and how they're responsible for making him the funny-man he is today.

GETTY IMAGES

Even when you play jerks, you manage to make them funny enough that they're basically oversize children. It makes them almost endearing.

I think that's one reason [director] Steve Carr cast me. This character had to be a jerk, and it was written in such a way that if it wasn't played comedically it would have been very dark. I can do that: I can make jerks funny.

My junior high experiences were among the worst in my life. How was yours?

It was definitely the worst time. I was pre-pubescent. Everyone was turning into young adults. I was not. So everybody got bigger than me in junior high. I was the runt. When you're standing in a group of boys and they look around, they find the smallest guy real quick. They go, "What are you laughing at, roo?" You've got to run for your life or make up something to get them laughing.

So you had the squeaky high-pitched voice?

[Laughs] I didn't even have that. Usually, you had to go through puberty to have a cracking voice. I was the last person in my class to go through puberty. It didn't happen to me until before my sophomore year in high school. Then it came in like a storm. I came back to school and people didn't recognize me. I got my braces off, I grew four inches, I cut my hair — it was good.

Being picked on, though, must have helped your gift for comedy.

Oh yeah, it was a defense mechanism. If I kept people laughing or kept them distracted, then they didn't want to pick on me. I consider being the smallest person in junior high a blessing, in a way. Not at the time, but afterward.

Sometimes failure and embarrassment and pain can be really helpful.

The only thing that makes a muscle grow is resistance. I think most of the greatest things I've learned and the biggest moments of my life have come through some failed attempt at something. If you get tested, if you get pushed, you find your character grows. You find out who you are and adapt and overcome. By the way, I am not advocating any kind of bullying. [Laughs]

Stand-up is surely one of the greatest tests of that: You get up and die on stage for years until you find your voice.

Yes. It's the loneliest plan on earth. [Laughs] But it makes you stronger!

Then stand-up comics must be the strongest people in the world.

[Laughs] And probably the most psychologically damaged.

'13TH'

New on Netflix

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge

Legendary activist Angela Davis is one of the many people making fiery points about race in America in Ava DuVernay's doc "13th," now streaming on Netflix. NETFLIX

Ava DuVernay's "13th" is devastating, beautifully researched and important — but aren't those cuss words in our culture? Do such adjectives not make the doc, which is essentially about the history of racism in America, sound like eating your vegetables? But watching "13th" never feels like eating your vegetables. It has an urgency that goes beyond the timeliness of its subject. It may be a talking-heads-and-clips affair, but it's designed with such force and fire that it would leave one shaking even if we weren't facing a possible Trump presidency. It is, to steal Woodrow Wilson's description of D.W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," "history written with lightning."

And how: "13th" offers a "secret" or "alternative," history of America after the Civil War right up through, essentially, a few weeks ago. It argues, cogently and shatteringly, that generations of white politicians and lawmakers have exploited a loophole in the 13th Amendment, which added that free black people could be jailed "as punishment for a crime."

And jailed they have been. DuVernay's job, as a historian and a filmmaker, is to connect the dots. She and her roster of smart, eloquent commentators trace racism as though it was a mutating virus, walking us through Jim Crow, the "Southern Strategy," the Reagan-era War on Drugs, the Clinton-era crime bill, the rise of corporate prisons — all laws designed to disproportionately target and punish black citizens. All the while a ticker counter shows the meteoric rise of the prison population, a large number of them African-American.

As she reclaims history, DuVernay is laser-focused yet comprehensive, unsparing. She doesn't even excuse Hillary, juxtaposing footage of her describing black youths as "super predators" in the '90s with Trump stirring up mob mentality over the "Central Park Five." She's not afraid to be on-the-nose, as when she cuts video of white people assaulting black protestors at Trump rallies with chillingly identical footage from the '60s. As balance, of sorts, she includes no less than Newt Gingrich saying, "No one who is white understands what it's like to be black in America." By the time she's arrived at the era of Trayvon Martin, Oscar Grant, Eric Garner and Philando Castile, it's hard to argue her point that racism never went away — it just went underground.

This is electric political filmmaking, collecting the established wisdom of her gallery of experts and tying it all together in a neat bow. That it's showing on Netflix and not theaters does not rob it of importance; no one goes to the movies to watch social-issue docs now anyway. Instead it's beamed into every home, ready to change hearts and minds with but a click. Maybe even your Fox News-loving parents will watch it. It's mandatory viewing that doesn't feel like work; it feels like a privilege — as key a piece of art as any about the black experience.

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Overcoming sexism in the workplace

Fighting the patriarchy — with style

SARA FEINSTEIN
letters@metro.us

It all began in a living room on the Upper West Side. A group of women in their 20s and 30s would gather to vent about the challenges in their white, male-dominated workplaces.

"These meetings would turn into hourlong bitch sessions," explains award-winning journalist and author Jessica Bennett. "It was like Alcoholics Anonymous for feminism."

For Bennett, then a Newsweek reporter struggling to find her voice in an office full of men, the club became not only an open forum to share tactics but the inspiration for her latest book, "Feminist Fight Club," a survival manual for dealing with sexism in the workplace.

"Eventually it occurred to me that a lot of what we were talking about was really useful, and maybe it needed to be shared."

While gender issues have certainly become part of the mainstream conversation given the recent political climate, much of the discourse seems to simply highlight the issues and graze over solutions.

Bennett's goal is to change this. After digging through dense academic research, she assembled a series of battle tactics that will take down some of the most common culprits in the office.

We've highlighted some of our favorite fight moves from her book.

"Manterrupter"

Kanye's 2009 VMA mo-

Alternate curriculum

What if the students ran their own schools? Before you list the dystopian teen novels that idealize this concept, take note: It's already happened — and it was a success. Samuel Levin was a high school junior when he launched the Independent Project at Great Barrington's Monument Mountain Regional High School. Frustrated with the provided education program, Levin decided to create a new "school" based on his peers' ideas. Students pose questions and work with teachers who serve as "mentors" in finding unique and alternative solutions.

The first year of the Independent Project had eight pupils over the course of five months. Students spent their time learning to "write a play, build a boat, synthesize a protein," according to an interview following the pilot with the Washington Post. The courses are varied and amenable because, as Levin believes, students are learning curriculum no longer relevant to modern times. The result was passion-focused, garnering students' interests and creating ways to learn from them.

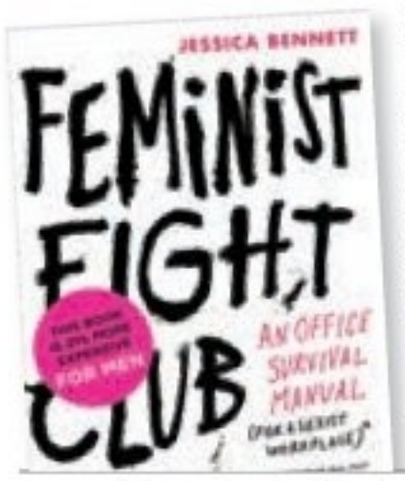
Samuel Levin swapped the dynamic of student-teacher relationship. ISTOCK

Did it work? Well, Levin wrote the book on it. Going on to attend Oxford University himself, Levin collaborated with his mother, a developmental psychologist and educator, Susan Engel, to write "A School of Our Own," published in September from New Press. The book gives a first person perspective of their first year with the program as well as advice for bringing their learning methods into your homes and schools. Engel and Levin will be at Porter Square Books on Oct. 12 at 7 p.m. to discuss their work and creating a new kind of education environment for students.

RACHEL RACZKA

ment was perhaps the most iconic example of this fairly common routine. While grabbing the mic from Taylor Swift and propelling into a boisterous monologue might seem like something only Kanye would do, studies show that men not only speak more than women in professional meetings, but they also interrupt more frequently.

The fix: Bennett likens her solution to "two cars racing toward each other" — in other words, just keep talking. "The key," she explains, "is to prevent him from getting a word in while simultaneously acting like you are the chillest person in the room."



"Bropropriator"

This bro, a pompous creature, finds the need to appropriate credit for another's work. Research shows that in situations when men and women work together, colleagues and bosses typically assume men deserve the recognition.

The fix: To avoid having the spotlight snatched from them, Bennett suggests women embrace an authoritative attitude and present their ideas with so much power that nobody can forget them. If it's too late to do that, they can always whip out the "thank 'n' yank–" a swift stunt that consists of thanking him for liking your great idea, and then quickly yanking the credit right back. "It's a sneaky yet highly effective self-crediting maneuver that still leaves you looking good," explains Bennett. "Sure, sometimes a biting 'Is there an echo in here?' may also work."

"Stenographucker"

The stenographucker assumes you're the office secretary, oftentimes asking if you'd mind taking notes or grabbing him a quick cup of joe.

The fix: But what if you just don't know how to? "The bad barista" involves simply informing your male colleague that you'd love to, if only you were capable. Thankfully, you do know somebody perfect for the job. Bennett's suggests this clever comeback: "I'm actually on the hook for a big presentation right now. But you know who's actually great at making spreadsheets? Brad over here." If that doesn't work, her other option goes right for the jugular: Try asking in a concerned tone, "Are your hands broken?"

3 Things we learned in Brady's return, Patriots' win

There was never any doubt as the Patriots wrecked the Browns Sunday.

ERIC WILBUR
@MetroBOS
sports@metro.us

The Patriots dominated the Browns from kickoff to countdown in a 33-13 Week 5 win to improve to 4-1. Here are three things we learned:

1 Tom Brady is still good

Well, not too much surprise to this one, even considering that Brady returned to action with a 406-yard passing effort — the eighth 400-yard game of his career — including three touchdown passes.

But if there were any lingering concern that Brady might be a bit rusty after four weeks on the sidelines, the Patriots quarterback put those qualms to rest right out of the gate on Sunday. Brady completed 10 of his first 12 passes in the first quarter (and the incomplete passes were both drops by James White and Julian Edelman) for 137 yards and a touchdown. By the time the first half finished, Brady already had a pair of touchdowns and 271 yards. Likewise, if you were worried that he might not find instant chemistry on the field with guys like tight end Martellus Bennett and wide receiver Chris Hogan, well, forget that. Brady found Bennett for all three of his touchdown passes, and helped further expose the speedy Hogan as the team's primary deep threat, finding him for impressive gains of 43 yards and 63 yards. (Hogan also left the game with team medical personnel in late in the third quarter, after possibly suffering a concussion, a development to watch in coming weeks.) In all, Brady got seven different targets involved in the game and completed 28 of his 40 passes. Not that we ever, ever, ever (ever) need another Deflategate controversy, but maybe Brady should take a four-week vacation every year if this is going to be the result.

2 More than just Gronk now

Martellus Bennett could be Tom Brady's new favorite weapon. GETTY IMAGES

Not a bad way for Brady to get both tight ends involved in Sunday's win, finding Bennett and Rob Gronkowski a combined 11 times for 176 yards. Bennett's day began with a scare when he limped off the field in the first quarter after what appeared to be an injury to his right knee, but that turned out to be a temporary fright. Brady ended up finding him three times in the end zone for the first three-touchdown game of the tight end's career. In fact, the third time Brady found him, on a 37-yard touchdown pass, the quarterback also had a nearby Gronkowski wide open on the play at the 20-yard line. But Brady elected to go with the new guy, paying off with the score. Not that it was another bust of a day for Gronkowski. Far from it. Gronkowski finally got involved in this one, hailing in five catches for 109 yards, including an impressive 37-yard pick-up in the first quarter during which he shook off a number of Browns defenders. The hamstring appears to be just fine. So does his new partner in crime at tight end.

3 What in the wide, wide world is wrong with Gostkowski?

On the bright side, the Patriots kicker made all four of his extra-point attempts on Sunday. But the theory that his pivotal, missed kick in last January's AFC Championship game is lingering in his mojo might be proving accurate. Gostkowski missed his third field goal of the season against Cleveland, shanking a 50-yard bid wide left near the end of the first half. After making a 30-yard attempt in the fourth quarter, he's now only 7-of-10 on field goal attempts this season, and has already matched the amount of missed he had all of last season through only five games. In fact, that's the most he's ever missed in any season. Brady may be back, but the Patriots kicker seems very much lost for the time being. It won't kill them in October, but if Gostkowski has the same problems during the second half of the season, it could prove to be a major deterrent, just as it was in Denver earlier this year.

Aries Take the initiative and do something that will get your energy flowing. Exercise and a nutritious diet will be key. Romance is encouraged.

Taurus Listen attentively and be objective, but in the end, do what you know in your heart is right for you. You will learn a lot from talking to others.

Gemini Keep your thoughts to yourself and avoid critical people. Look for ways to bring about positive change to your community or surrounding environment.

Cancer Plan to make constructive changes at home. Expanding a space to invite friends over for an entertaining afternoon will result in an interesting encounter.

Leo Focus on what's important to you. Arguing will be a waste of time. Channel your energy into helping others and furthering your own advancement.

Virgo Speak up and share your ideas. Expect to face opposition from someone who demands more of your time. Be prepared to adjust your schedule.

Libra Taking a trip or making plans with a loved one will have its challenges, but could also lead to a memorable experience. Don't be afraid to try something new.

Scorpio A proposal will come your way. Weigh the pros and cons and set your sights on initiating the groundwork. Your input will be valued.

Sagittarius Information you receive may sound amazing, but with a little research you'll be disappointed. You are best off working alone toward a goal.

Capricorn Your ideas will be well-received. Participating in causes that concern you will be emotionally draining, but also satisfying. Don't be afraid to use unusual methods.

Aquarius Make home improvements and search for your next project. Preparing a perfect space to enjoy with the people you love will bring you closer together.

Pisces Be careful how you handle others. Someone is likely to balk at your suggestions. Offer incentives if you want everyone to join your quest. EUGENIA LAST
